It depends on what you are looking for: If general information, then perhaps a search engine like Google, Bing or Yahoo will suffice.

If you are looking for a means to organize your research and document your finding, My Heritage.com, Legacy. com, Gramps, Roots Magic, GenoPro, Simple Family Tree, My Family Tree, Family Tree Legends, Brothers Keeper and Archives will serve the need.

To make a wide area search use Cyndi's List. It will give you oodles of list, some free while other require a stipend.

If you are looking for specific information check FamilySearch.org

GenWeb can be of assist too. It will take you to specific states and with the state to cities/counties and searchable files within.

There many Genealogy search programs available they require a membership fee to join, i.e. Ancestry. Even the many of the free program have advanced version for a fee.

Most everyone knows that my favorite is GOOGLE. The result fully depends on the query. It can be simple of complex or somewhere in between. Following Google is Ancestry and Family Search. New information is being added regularly. What you can't find can often be found a few months later.
